

---

theStranger

---

Primary Election Endorsements! 🗳️

Cheat Sheet! 📄✍️

Bands, Bubbles, and Bob Ross! 🌊👤

---

VISUAL ART | Mar 7, 2012 at 4:00 am

Art in Transit

A View from a Bus, Plus: Tupperware

JEN GRAVES

Susan Dory's snapping jaws. COURTESY OF WINSTON WÄCHTER FINE ART

Seattle artist Susan Dory's abstract paintings have always been soft and waxy. (She makes them by underpainting, pouring, and masking-off, leaving layers of shapes that shift from separate to interdependent.) Her color combinations have always been luscious. But in the last two years, her work has undergone a transformation—though you could think of it simply as the transition from car to bus.

For the better part of 10 years, Dory's paintings had one basic design element: horizontal bands of acrylic color with curved edges. She called them "capsules," and they zoomed by within the frames of the canvas. Looking at them was like watching the world go by from the window of a fast-moving car. Her newest paintings—some of which are six feet to a side—shown simultaneously in Seattle and New York at Winston Wächter Fine Art, are dominated by elongated arches. The arches that appear in the top half of each painting reach downward; those in the lower half reach upward. It's as if each painting were a set of open jaws, or many sets of jaws, each vying for space. The action implies, but never establishes firmly, a horizon line.

This is also what the inside of a city bus feels like, seats rising from below and handholds lowering from above, bodies swaying and crowding. The arches have thick outlines, mostly black or white, which immediately brings to mind aerosol art, or graffiti. In a phone conversation, Dory says that her son has become an accomplished graffiti artist—and unintentional influence. Recently, on a trip with him, she fell in love with LA wildstyle graffiti: vivid, hard-to-read, complexly overlapping writing. Dory's signature softness and refined paint handling has gone a little bit street. In some of these paintings, you might be looking up at the famously swooping freeway overpasses of LA. It is an exhilarating break.

ADVERTISEMENT

Don't miss 1776- one week only at The 5th Avenue Theatre August 2-6!

Putting history in the hands of the humans who were left out the first time around.

Her work began shifting in 2008, when Dory says the economic collapse led her to a greater emphasis on systematic interconnectedness. Her new paintings, like her old ones, are entirely abstract—there are no actual images of jaws, cars, or buses in them, just colored shapes and lines. But you can see that they have taken on a new internal conflict, the way that parts both try to fit in and try to interrupt the whole as these arches fight their way forward, out, up, down.

Showing with Dory is the (rightfully) beloved LA artist George Stoll, who hand-makes manufactured objects such as sponges, wrapped rolls of toilet paper, and, here, Tupperware. Stoll's cups and tumblers are made of beeswax and paraffin pigmented to mimic the real-life colors of the containers over the years, from frosted pastels to the '70s-est oranges and deepest raspberries. Their subtly rippled and thumbbed-over fleshy surfaces betray the hands that made them, but only slightly—they're monuments to the funny intimacy of Tupperware. ★

ADVERTISEMENT

Vote Costa: Because Leadership Requires Taking a Stand.

Maren Costa has been endorsed by MLK Labor, LGBTQ Victory Fund, Teresa Mosqueda, and many more!

Comments 4

TAGS: VISUAL ART FEATURES

The Stranger depends on your continuing support to provide articles like this one. In return, we pledge our ongoing commitment to truthful, progressive journalism and serving our community. So if you're able, please consider a small recurring contribution. Thank you—you are appreciated!

CONTRIBUTE NOW

---

More In Visual Art

Anthony Zinonos's Bare Essentials

Sarah More's Steady Meditations

Susan Dory's Infinite Reticulation

Kristen Liu-Wong's Erotic Ferocity

The Flood Is Coming

Today's Stranger Suggests: Rodrigo Valenzuela: *The New Land

Editors' Picks

---

Mayor Harrell Defunds Asian American Hate Crime Prevention by 50%

Finding Humanity Alongside Druids, Demons, Tabaxi, and War Veterans

Fire Island* Is a Gorgeous Gay Throwback

Lieutenant Uhura and the Death of American Progress

The Long Winter

The Bravest Woman in Seattle

Popular Articles

---

Anthony Zinonos's Bare Essentials

---

Fazilat Soukhakian's Faith in Change

---

Kevin Muñoz's Scenic Serenity

---

Why a City without Graffiti Is Not a City

---

Sarah More's Steady Meditations

---

Víctor Meléndez's Integrity in Action

---

Kristen Liu-Wong's Erotic Ferocity

Just Can't Get Enough?

Sign up for our newsletter for news recaps, updates, and more!

Subscribe

theStranger

is a proud member of the

index

media network

---

MASTHEAD   AD INFO & RATES   JOBS AT THE STRANGER   CONTACT   PRIVACY POLICY   TERMS OF USE
TAKEDOWN POLICY   FIND THE STRANGER NEAR YOU

Support The Stranger

All contents © Index Newspapers LLC
800 Maynard Ave S, Suite 200, Seattle, WA 98134