

- MUSIC
- THEATRE
- DANCE
- FILM
- ART
- COMEDY
- FOOD & STYLE
- BOOKS & TALKS
- EVENTS
- WIN IT!

ART

Band Above

Friday, April 22, 2016 | by CITY ARTS STAFF

Susan Dory's work often includes many stages of underpainting, creating texture and contour with strips of tape, then more painting with brushes and with pours. Like many of the works in her current show Micromega, "Band Above" is made of many layers of interwoven paint.

"This piece is about shifts in scale, my fantasy geometry and the idea/theory of parts that make up or influence the whole," says Dory. "I was trying to examine, wrangle, synthesize and reconcile the sets, palette and wardrobe in Chantal Akerman's film Jeanne Dielman, the grid cell and the first fabulous album art by Django Django."

Micromega is on view at Winston Wächter through May 7.

SEE MORE IN ART

SEE MORE IN THE MAY 2016 ISSUE →

⋮
⋮
⋮
reddit
⋮
Like
72

Enter your keywords

SEARCH

0 Comments

City Arts

 Login ▾

 Recommend

 Share

Sort by Best ▾

Start the discussion...

Be the first to comment.

 Subscribe

 Add Disqus to your site Add Disqus Add

 Privacy

Receive Email Updates

GO

SUGGESTED ARTICLES

Sketchbook Porn: Brittany Kusa

The secret lives of sketchbooks: a glimpse at the process behind your favorite art.

2001: A Seattle Odyssey

A forgotten chapter in the artistic history of the city by David Lasky.

Empathy With Machines

Reilly Donovan and Sofia Lee talk new media and the IRL value of digital spaces

Performative Painting One

Single-channel video documentation and accompanying painting from live performance.

Part of the Solution

Electric Coffin created an eye-popping visual response to clothing-industry waste

Contact

Privacy Policy

Terms of Use

Encore Media Group

Seattle, Wash. © Copyright 2013-2016

About

Jobs

Advertise

Subscribe

Archives

Get Your Copy